Award for Outstanding Educational Contributions in Honor of Edward J. Romieniec, FAIA

This award recognizes a single individual architectural educator for outstanding educational contributions.

History

In 1985, Edward J. Romieniec, an architecture professor at the Texas A&M University College of Architecture, received the Texas Society of Architects Award for Excellence in Architectural Education. It was the first such award to be presented. The award recognized Romieniec — who served as dean of the College of Architecture at Texas A&M from its inception in 1969 until he returned to a faculty post in 1973—for inspiring others to excellence in architecture, and for his “exceptional ability to maintain relevance by directing students toward the future while drawing on the past.”

Romieniec was a lifelong advocate of educational travel and study abroad programs. As such, he established the Edward J. Romieniec Graduate Traveling Fellowship in the College of Architecture, which funds the travel of first-year architecture graduate students to destinations abroad. In Romieniec’s honor, one of his former students, Ronald L. Skaggs, Class of 1965, established the Edward J. Romieniec, FAIA Endowed Scholarship for outstanding architecture students. Romieniec’s legacy remains very much alive—in the lives and careers he mentored, and in the classrooms where his old colleagues are still passing on his wisdom to a new generation.

He was also the first licensed African American architect in the state of Texas, and the first African American to be admitted to the Texas Society of Architects.

When faced with discrimination from white firms, Chase founded his own firm, both to have an opportunity to shape public spaces, and to create opportunities for other black drafters, engineers, and architects.
